Northridge Looms Large in Regional Economy, Data Shows

Research Center Says for Every Dollar the State Invests in the University, More than Four are Generated

More than $4 is generated for every dollar the state invests in Cal State Northridge, according to a community impact report released on November 11 by the university's Center for Southern California Studies.

From a state investment of about $164 million, Northridge's impact on the Los Angeles economy is estimated at up to $686 million, with the greatest influence in the sectors of services, foreign and domestic trade, and government.

Researchers found that the university expands the services industry by about $277 million, including $72.7 million in the finance, insurance and real estate industries and $69.7 million in health care.

Altogether, the university spends about $334 million annually in Los Angeles County. Spending by employees whose firms receive university dollars totals about $250 million, the report said.

University activity creates about 6,000 jobs in addition to its own 5,800 staff and student employees, according to the report. About 48 percent of jobs created as the result of university activities were in the service sector, followed by 22 percent in government, and 18 percent in retail and wholesale trade. Construction and manufacturing accounted for about 8 percent.

"We have known all along, through anecdotal evidence, about the tremendous impact we have on the region's economy and social well-being," said Cal State Northridge President Jolene Koester. The data in the report provides "overwhelming" evidence of the university's influential role, she said.

- Other findings in the report:
- University outreach programs in hundreds of area schools involve at least 30,000 K-12 students at a value of about $6.5 million.
 - Tuition and fees from CSUN's out of state students alone brought about $50 million to the region.
 - At nearly 6,000 annually, Northridge enrolls 30 percent more Los Angeles County high school graduates than any other area university.

- Northridge's 6,100 annual graduates earn degrees that closely mirror the work force needs of the county, with about 20 percent in business and economics, 18 percent in social and behavioral sciences and about 15 percent in arts and entertainment.
- University grants and contracts brought nearly $67 million into the area economy in 2002/03.
- The university's applied academic research is supported by about $27.3 million in external grants, a figure that has doubled in the past four years.
- Students received about $116 million in grants, mostly from outside the area.
- Last year, more than 74,000 people attended campus cultural events. Since 1980, the university's art galleries have hosted more than 500 exhibitions on campus, bringing 25,000 to 30,000 visitors to campus annually.

The community impact report is based on the fiscal year 2002/03, the most recent year for which sufficient data was available. For more information about the report, call the Center for Southern California Studies at (818) 677-6518, or visit www.csum.edu/~cscs/. ■

Japanese Americans in Pre-WWII Valley Are Focus of Exhibit

'Telling Our Stories' Provides Rare Glimpse into Lives of Valley Nisei Before Internment

Seven young scholars in Asian American Studies 390 are on a high stakes treasure hunt. Armed with video recorders, pens and pads, they are collecting the untold stories and hard-to-find photos of Japanese Americans who lived in the San Fernando Valley prior to World War II.

What they have recorded will be on view in a public exhibition set for 5:30 p.m. Tuesday, Nov. 30, in the university's Campus Theatre lobby and patio.

The rare photos and vignettes in "Telling Our Stories—Japanese American Experiences from the 1910s to the 1950s in the San Fernando Valley," co-sponsored by the Chicano/a Studies Department, focus largely on the lives of some of the 3,200 Japanese Americans who resided in the Valley during the pre-war period—some of them on farmland now occupied by Japanese Americans continued on page 4.

From the "Telling Our Stories" exhibit, these photos were provided courtesy of Nancy Takayama of the San Fernando Valley Japanese American Community Center.

New EOC Mobile Command Post Ready for Duty

Chancellor, President and Campus Inspect Emergency Unit During its CSUN Debut

California State University Chancellor Charles B. Reed and President Jolene Koester were among the first to inspect Cal State Northridge's new 40-foot long Emergency Operations Center (EOC) mobile command post trailer at a November 11 open house.

Northridge Chief of Police Anne Glavin and Public Safety Department staff demonstrated to the chancellor and other open house visitors what happens when the completely custom-designed unit is fully deployed and in "operational mode." The 12-person mobile command post is outfitted for full police dispatch capability and tactical planning away from the central station.

"We can deploy the unit for any disaster or critical incident response," said Chief Glavin. "It will be invaluable to us in situations when we have to get in close and fast, and in managing operations close to the scene in the event of an earthquake, other natural disaster or severe emergency."

Physical Plant Management has a room set aside for conversion to an emergency command post, Glavin noted, but should that room become incapacitated for any reason, the self-contained EOC trailer could take on the command operations.

Open house visitors were able to see the trailer's conference area designed for disaster planning, tactical operations or command and control of other emergency services. The area is equipped with telephones, satellite television, computer operations, remote camera capability and other features.

Built by Perris-based University

Specialty Vehicle, the 7,000 lb. unit potentially could be mobilized by CSUN's Public Safety Department on a mutual aid basis to help other CSU sites in case of disasters at sister campuses.

Chief Glavin briefed Chancellor Reed and other CSU officials on the mobile command unit and on CSUN's emergency response plan. Other matters discussed were the campus' communications protocol in non-disaster situations, the campus building warden program, terrorism training for police and other emergency-related matters.

"Disaster response and preparedness are high on Chancellor Reed's list of concerns, said Chief Glavin, adding that risk management is a high priority across the entire California State University system.

Accompanying the chancellor and President Koester were CSU Vice Chancellor Jackie McClain; Executive Vice Chancellor for Business Richard West; Provost Harry Hellenbrand; Vice President for Administration and Finance Mohammad Qayoumi; and University Advancement Vice President Judy C. Knudson. ■

Theatre Alumnus Named Governor's Cabinet Secretary

Terry Tamminen Leaves CalEPA Post to Accept Job as Liaison to Heads of State Agencies

Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger has appointed Cal State Northridge theatre alumnus Terry Tamminen to the post of Cabinet secretary, where he will serve as chief liaison between the governor and the major state agency chiefs. He attended CSUN in 1973.

"Terry has been a bold and innovative counselor to me as a CalEPA secretary over the past year," said Governor Schwarzenegger. "I look forward to his guidance and advice as we work together with my cabinet secretaries to shape policy that benefits all of California and keeps our state on the path to economic recovery."

Tamminen will take over the Cabinet secretary position from Marybel Batjer this month.

"I look forward to using my background in not only environmental policy, but also my experience as a small business owner, as a consultant, in agriculture, and in education," he said of his new job.

Prior to his work at the Environmental Protection Agency, Tamminen was executive director of the Environment Now Foundation in Santa Monica. He was founder and director of Santa Monica Baykeeper, and co-founded Waterkeeper programs in San Diego, Orange County, Ventura and Santa Barbara.

Other career experiences include tropical fish breeding in Australia, and a seven-year stint as manager of a large sheep ranch. He has helped develop new methods to control livestock disease and has managed real estate. At various times during his career, he has helped the Nigerian government create its first solid waste recycling program, and participated in university studies of conch depletion in the Bahamas and declining manatee populations in Florida.

Tamminen was chair of the Public Advisory Committee to the Southern California Wetlands Recovery Project, and served on the Los Angeles/Long Beach Harbor Safety Committee. As a Wishtoyo Foundation board member, he worked to preserve natural resources by using the traditional teachings of the Chumash Indians.

A licensed Coast Guard ship captain, the versatile Tamminen has used his Northridge theater training onstage, portraying William Shakespeare in his children's play. Among his current book projects are a fictional diary of the bard, and a book about the "economic and environmental cost of our dependence on oil." ■

Trustees OK Proposed '05-'06 CSU Support Budget

Undergrad and Teacher Credential Candidate Fees are Set for 8 Percent Hike

California State University's Board of Trustees on October 28 approved the CSU's proposed 2005/06 support budget, including an increase in student fees starting in fall 2005.

If approved by Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger and California's state legislature, the budget will require resident undergraduates and teacher credential candidates to pay an 8 percent fee increase, or $186 and $215 more, respectively. Graduate student fees will increase by 10 percent, or $282.

Combined with average campus-based fees of $582, the projected undergraduate resident annual fee for 2005/06 will be $3,102. Teacher credential students can expect to pay $3,504, and all other graduate students $3,684.

Trustees agreed to the fee increase in a May 2004 higher education compact with Governor Schwarzenegger, calling for the CSU to develop its annual budget plan based on the assumption that undergraduate student fees will increase by 14 percent for 2004/05, and by 8 percent for both 2005/06 and 2006/07.

Given the high cost of graduate programs and expected higher earnings of graduate students, the governor expects graduate student fees eventually to be 50 percent higher than undergraduate fees.

Based on the compact, the proposed 2005/06 budget requests $224.8 million in new revenue for the CSU, including funding for a 2.5 percent—$63.7 million—student enrollment increase to accommodate 10,000 new CSU students (8,103 full-time equivalent students).

About $101.2 million in new revenue will be generated from the proposed 2005/06 fee increase and enrollment growth revenue, $23.3 million of which will flow into a CSU grant pool to help financially needy students.

A 3 percent increase for general operations will fund nearly $137.8 million in mandatory costs, compensation and long-term needs unfunded for the past three years.

"Raising fees is a very difficult decision for all of us," said Board of Trustees chair Murray Galinson, adding that the board action was made necessary by system-wide budget cuts during the last three years. ■

Cal State Northridge.

For two semesters, Asian American Studies professor Edith Chen and her students have been on a mission to gather for exhibition all the stories and documents they can while they can. They are aware that time is not on their side.

"We can assume that the generations who lived during that time are not going to be with us much longer," said senior Peter Ngotngamwong. "It's important that we get their histories before it's too late."

A film called "Stand Up for Justice: The Ralph Lazo Story" will be screened at the exhibition to highlight the close relationships between Japanese Americans and Mexican Americans in the pre-war Valley and larger Los Angeles community. Lazo, a Mexican American high school youth, voluntarily accompanied his Japanese American friends to the Manzanar internment camp. He later earned a master's degree in sociology from CSUN.

Guests also will view the students' videotaped documentary based on 25 interviews with Nisei (second generation Japanese Americans)—many in their seventies, eighties and older.

"There's not a lot written about them," said Chen. "That's why our project is so important."

When Japanese Americans were ordered out of their Valley homes and into internment camps after the U.S. entry into the war, explained junior Amy Ikeda, many lost all of their family photos and much of their written history.

"They were only allowed to take a couple or so bags each," she said. "So there are lots of pictures documenting the camp periods, but not of their life before internment."

Another reason for the rarity of such records, said senior Michael Razon, compounds the tragedy of the Nisei wartime experience. "The records were buried or burned by the families," he said.

"Because many of their parents were immigrants," added Ikeda, "they didn't want Americans to think they had ties to Japan."

Their fears were fed by the actions of the FBI. "It was not uncommon at this time that the FBI would go into people's homes and search through their belongings," Chen said. "So they thought any evidence linking them to Japan furthered this notion that they were the enemy, they were not true Americans."

Chen said the project was initiated by Nancy Takayama of the San Fernando Valley Japanese American Community Center in Pacoima, who in summer 2003 sought the help of CSUN's Asian American Studies Department in collecting the oral histories.

Gordon Nakagawa, now interim associate dean in the College of Humanities, brought the idea to Chen. "He thought the Asian American Studies Communities and Field Practicum class would be the perfect forum to get students hands-on, practical field experience and training in collecting oral histories," she said, "as well as providing service and filling a community need."

Though the project has attracted support and collaboration from within the university, it is in need of greater financial support for its substantial equipment needs and time commitments, Chen said.

In the meantime, the project is evolving. The "Telling Our Stories" exhibition will travel to Mission College in the spring, and will be transformed into a play by drama teacher Randy Olea for a San Fernando Valley High School showcase in April 2005.

"Many of our students went to high school in the Valley, yet they have never heard about any of this," said Chen. "This is a great way of getting high school students to learn about their history, to learn about the Japanese American experience in these creative ways. This project is not just a one-shot deal; this is something that will have long-term impact."

For more information about the exhibition, call the Asian American Studies Department at (818) 677-4966, or e-mail edith.chen@csun.edu. ■
