CSUN Aquatic Therapy Facility Gets the Go-Ahead

$1 Million Federal Allocation Results from Collaboration Between Grateful Client and Congressman

Kinesiology professor Sam Britten and his Center of Achievement for the Physically Disabled helped change Art Donnelly's life, working him back to health and fitness after a 1994 accident left him a partial paraplegic. So the least Donnelly figured he could do was return the favor.

Donnelly, a longtime Santa Clarita Valley resident and business leader who is an acquaintance of U.S. Rep. Howard "Buck" McKeon, got the congressman interested in Britten's plan to expand his campus center with an aquatic therapy facility. After several years of effort, the collaboration finally paid off.

The congressman, campus leaders and Donnelly joined together recently to announce that Britten's $3.5 million Western Center for Adaptive Aquatic Therapy soon will become a reality on campus, in part because of a $1 million federal budget allocation that McKeon obtained this year for the project.

"A lot of people are going to get a lot of good benefit from this," said McKeon (R-Santa Clarita), announcing the allocation on the day President Clinton signed the federal appropriations bill that contained the funding. "And the people who have put their lives into making this facility what it is will be able to do that much more and help that many more people."

"This is indeed a special day in my life," added Britten, (right)a CSUN faculty member since 1959 and director of the center, which currently serves about 600 people a year with a variety of disabilities. "We'll be able to expand our programs. It'll be a wonderful opportunity for our students. And we probably can triple the number of people we'll be able to bring into the program."
Britten's current center, where CSUN students train in therapy and related skills by helping CSUN students and community members who have disabilities, currently operates out of 5,000-square-feet in the Kinesiology Building with a collection of treadmills and other exercise and therapy equipment.

The center's reputation has grown through the years, not only because its services to the community are at a very low cost, but also because of its extraordinary success in rehabilitating clients beyond what others often thought was possible. Thus the center now has a two to three-year waiting list for client openings.

The planned 8,000-square-foot adaptive aquatic therapy center, which could begin construction by this summer, will be built as an expansion of the existing center on the north side of the Kinesiology Building. The facility will have four therapeutic pools to help those with disabilities, including children.

A warm water pool will help adults with spinal cord and other disabling conditions. A cool water pool will help those with multiple sclerosis and similar conditions. A moving floor pool will allow the center to expand its services to include children. And a warm water spa will help with joint and soft tissue injuries.

CSUN Interim President Louanne Kennedy thanked McKeon for his help, telling him, "You've made a difference not just to the community of 28,000 students here, but to the whole community of the San Fernando Valley. And we will forever be grateful to you for that."

And to Britten, the president added, "The commitment you have to helping people who are often those that others don't want to see is really what is extraordinary about you. And you do it with gentleness and devotion and commitment, but also with extraordinary skill."

That's certainly a sentiment that Art Donnelly (left, working with student-therapist Steve Paredes) would second. The first time he came to Britten's center in 1996, he had to be carried in and out by hand. Now, after several years of regular twice-a-week sessions, Donnelly says he's about 80 percent independent and has much better use of his arms and hands.

"This is a wonderful place. I can't say enough about it," said Donnelly of Britten's center. "It's a fraternity. If someone's sick, we worry about them. It's just like a different life. I love Northridge. I wish it was my alma mater. Maybe I can go back and get my doctorate and say I graduated from Northridge."

McKeon credited Donnelly, who broke his neck and back during a fall in Mexico, with getting him interested in the aquatic therapy project, convincing him to tour Britten's current center and keeping contact with McKeon in prior years when the funding proposal had stalled in Washington.

"I've always been a man of action. That's what my personality is," said Donnelly. "This was one way I could thank the center for all the help they've given me. It's one way I can say 'thank you.' The aquatic therapy project is a reality. It isn't a dream anymore."

Dick Tyler Named University Associate VP of Public Relations

Corporate and Agency PR Veteran also is Former CSUN Lecturer

A public relations professional with more than 30 years experience in corporate and agency public relations has been named associate vice president of public relations and communications, reporting to University Relations Vice President William Outhouse.

Richard R. (Dick) Tyler (right) has worked for such national companies as American Airlines, Ford Motor Co. and Six Flags Corp. and has represented clients such as Hallmark, RCA, the Australian Trade Commision, Price Waterhouse, Sheraton Hotels and the government of the Bahamas.

Tyler has a long history with Cal State Northridge, having been a guest lecturer and panel participant on many occasions and, for more than a dozen years, taught the advanced public relations course offered by the Journalism Department. He served as faculty advisor and professional advisor to the campus chapter of the Public Relations Student Society of America.

Tyler is a past president of the Los Angeles chapter of the Public Relations Society of America and received that organization's "Outstanding PR Professional" award in 1987. He has been designated a "Fellow" in PRSA's national College of Fellows, a distinction granted only to some 300 public relations professionals nationwide.

Tyler joined the University Relations Division in mid-November to head CSUN's Public Relations Department. The department recently relocated to new offices on the first floor of the Education Building, room 1105A. The department phone numbers and mail drop remained the same.

Tyler's wife is Marcella Tyler, executive director of PR, marketing and communications for the College of Extended Learning.

MPA Registration

Registration is underway for the Master of Public Administration program offered through the College of Extended Learning. Classes provide graduate education for those in the public and nonprofit sector who wish to improve their knowledge and skills in the broad field of administration. The program is held at the CSUN campus, at Cal State Northridge at Channel Islands and in Burbank.

Intersession Classes

Mail-in/drop-box registration is underway. Dozens of university credit classes are offered through the College of Extended Learning during Intersession, Jan.3-28. On-campus registration is available at the Bookstore Complex, room 100. Intersession class schedules are available at the Matador Bookstore.

China Institute Faculty Development Grants

The China Institute at CSUN is accepting applications from faculty for awards to support the development of collaborative training and research programs with institutions in China. One competition will be held for the entire academic year. This competition will support proposals for the summer 2000, fall 2000 or spring 2001 terms. There will be two grant awards of $1,000 each. Projects that involve student assistants and visiting scholars from China are especially welcomed. Six copies of the application proposal must be submitted to the China Institute (via campus mail drop 8342) by Tue., Feb. 15.
China Scholarship Award

The China Institute at CSUN is accepting applications from undergraduate and graduate students in all fields of study for awards from the China Scholarship Council to support a full-year of study in any selected subject matter at an institution of higher learning in China. This competition will support applications for study in China for the 2000-2001 academic year. The scholarship will cover the recipient's tuition and living expenses. There is an additional stipend of $1,000 (or $500 for each recipient, if there are two) provided through the Lau Mi Award, established in the memory of Mildred Z. Mininberg. Six copies of application proposals must be submitted to the China Institute (via campus mail drop 8342) by Tue., Feb. 15. fmi-x3939 or e-mail zsu@csun.edu.

Test Preparation Courses

The College of Extended Learning sponsors a variety of test preparation courses Saturdays and evenings on campus. Classes prepare students to take the GRE, LSAT, GMAT, CBEST, MSAT, Reading Instruction Competence Assessment and Single Subject/Praxis Series-Mathematics for teachers. Brochures are available at the College of Extended Learning registration area, Bookstore Complex, room 100. For information about course content or exam format, call (818) 225-8981.

Health/Safety Reporting Shift

The CSUN Office of Environmental Health and Safety, starting Wed., Dec. 1, now reports to the Department of Facilities Planning, Design and Construction. The activities of Environmental Health and Safety have more in common with Department of Facilities Planning than with the public safety operation, where the unit has reported in the past. This change in reporting will have no impact on the interaction of Environmental Health and Safety with the other units of the campus.

Home Address for W-2 Forms

University employees (including student employees) will be mailed their W-2 forms, reporting statement of earnings, from the state Controller's Office in Sacramento, enabling employees to prepare their income tax documents. To report a change of address, you must complete an Employee Action Request form immediately. This form is available in Payroll Services, Administration Park 705, and in Human Resource Services, Administration Park 702, or call Human Resource Services at x3812 and request a form be mailed to your campus address. Your department secretary also should be notified of any change in address. fmi-Payroll Services, x2314, or Rhonda Gershon, x3812.

Research, Scholarship and Creative Activity Awards

The Research and Grants Committee announces the 2000-01 Competition for Research, Scholarship and Creative Activity Awards, which provide faculty the opportunity to receive up to $5,000 to pursue their scholarly and creative interests. Faculty may apply for three units of release time and/or funds for project expenses. In recent years, more than 60 percent of applicants have been funded. The deadline for submission of applications is 5 p.m. Fri., March 10. New faculty (hired as of fall 1997) will be considered as a group and given special consideration. Application materials are available in college and department offices or from the Research and Sponsored Projects Office at x2901. Faculty also can download the application from the Research and Sponsored Projects web page at: http://www.csun.edu/~gripact/research.html
