Alzheimer's Association Center Opens in Monterey Hall

New Alliance Means Improved Services to Community, Increased Opportunities for Students

CSUN Interim President Louanne Kennedy and other dignitaries celebrated the opening of the new Alzheimer's Association Center at Cal State Northridge—an important new partnership and facility that will bring improved services to the community and increased opportunities for campus students.

The new full-service center of the Alzheimer's Association of Los Angeles, located in leased space in CSUN's Monterey Hall building, achieves the association's longtime goal of creating a local base for its community services and resources in the San Fernando Valley region.

The center will offer such dementia-related resources as information about Alzheimer's disease; educational events for caregivers, the general public and students; professional and paraprofessional training and walk-in family consultation, family assistance and support groups.

The association's campus presence also forms a new partnership with the university's College of Health and Human Development, and particularly its Communication Disorders and Sciences Department, that should create new training and education opportunities for CSUN students.

"This opening ceremony has tremendous significance to CSUN," President Kennedy said. "Not only are we welcoming an important partner to the campus, but we also are celebrating the beginning of a new era. This is an important step toward our goal of increasing collaborations with the community."

Discussing future plans to have Monterey Hall become a one-stop referral source for many campus services, the president added, "The opening of the Alzheimer's Association Center at CSUN is the beginning of a commitment to make Monterey Hall the community's service gateway to our campus."

The alliance between the Alzheimer's Association and the university is a first-of-its-kind venture for both organizations. The association's Cal State Northridge location also will be its only facility in Los Angeles County, other than the group's main office in the mid-Wilshire area of Los Angeles.

Professor Stephen Sinclair, chair of CSUN's Communication Disorders and Sciences Department, said he expects CSUN graduate students training to become speech language pathologists, as well as those in other fields, will help handle patient and family referrals from the Alzheimer's Association center.

In February, Sinclair's department opened an Adult Aphasia and Dementia Clinic overseen by associate professor Randall Aker and staffed by Aker and graduate students. The clinic serves aphasia patients (those with impaired speech due to stroke) and will expand to deal with Alzheimer's disease.

"This is a strategic advance for the university," Sinclair said. CSUN students learning to become professionals will get real-world experience and training, including working with outside groups. And the alliance will help CSUN meet the tremendous demand for more caregivers in the field.

"The Alzheimer's Association Center is important because it demonstrates that partnerships and collaborations are vital to the university," said HHD Dean Ann Stutts. Over time, CSUN students from other academic disciplines are expected to join in the care process through multi-disciplinary teams.

Alzheimer's disease is a progressive disorder that attacks the brain and results in memory loss, confusion, impaired judgment and personality changes. It is the most common cause of severe intellectual impairment in the elderly and is a primary cause for nursing home placements.

State officials estimate that more than 500,000 Californians are affected by the illness, and the Alzheimer's Association says more than 150,000 of those are in Los Angeles County. At present, it is not known what causes the disease or how to prevent or cure it-although symptoms can be reduced.

Twice Emmy-nominated actress Shelley Fabares, a national spokesperson for the Alzheimer's Association, was the guest speaker at the center's opening ceremony on Friday, April 28. The center will be headed by association regional director Rachelle Bloch, and can be reached at (818) 677-4404.
One Campus V.P. Hired as Another Announces His Departure

'Mo' Qayoumi Named New Administration V.P.; Bill Outhouse to Resign from University Relations

Cal State Northridge has concluded its search for a new administration vice president with the hiring of a veteran administrator from Missouri, but now will commence a new search after Bill Outhouse's planned resignation as vice president for University Relations.

Mohammad "Mo" Qayoumi (right)- a 25-year veteran of higher education and industry who is a vice chancellor at the University of Missouri-Rolla-will be CSUN's new vice president for Administration and Finance, Interim President Louanne Kennedy announced.

Qayoumi, UMR's vice chancellor for administrative services for the past five years, is due to start July 1 in a similar role at CSUN, where he also will carry the title of chief financial officer. Qayoumi (pronounced "Kay-o-mee") will succeed James Sullivan, who served as CSUN's interim vice president and CFO since January 1999.

The hiring of Qayoumi - a native of Kabul, Afghanistan, who came to the United States in 1978 - concluded a seven-month national search to fill the CSUN position. Qayoumi topped the field of nearly 75 applicants for the vice president's job, including 11 who participated in videoconference interviews and five who visited the campus in recent weeks.

As one of four CSUN vice presidents, Qayoumi, a veteran of 21 years in higher education, will oversee the university's Administration and Finance Division with about 430 employees and a $26 million budget.

Previously, Qayoumi served from 1986 to 1995 as associate vice president for administration at San Jose State University, which Kennedy noted gave him valuable prior experience in the Cal State system. From 1979 to 1986, Qayoumi held several administrative positions at the University of Cincinnati, Ohio.

Meanwhile, Outhouse (right), who has headed CSUN's University Relations Division since March 1998, accepted a position as executive vice president of the Northwest Arkansas Community College Foundation, which serves one of the fastest growing educational institutions in that state.

Outhouse, who previously spent 10 years at the University of Arkansas, will remain here through June. Outhouse expressed mixed emotions about the move, saying he enjoyed working at CSUN, but also looks forward to returning to his prior home state.
CSUN Student Films Honored at Annual Film Showcase

Best Work of R-TV-F Film Production Students is Screened at Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences Theater

Five teams of production students in Cal State Northridge's Radio-Television-Film Department had their short-subject films honored at the university's 10th annual Student Film Showcase held Wednesday, April 26, in Beverly Hills.

Fay Kanin, a former Academy Award-winning writer and past president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, delivered an inspiring and encouraging introduction to the film showcase held at the academy's theater before an audience of several hundred.

"Our annual student film showcase in a highpoint in our ability to present our most outstanding student films to the professional world," said R-TV-F Department chair Judith Marlane. The films selected are the best of each year's senior projects by film production-emphasis students.

The five films were chosen by a three-member panel of R-TV-F faculty members: assistant professor Bob Gustafson, professor John Schultheiss and assistant professor Jon Stahl. Professor Frederick Kuretski was the showcase director, and the students' project instructor was professor Temma Kramer.

Kramer said, "This showcase is a bridge between our students' academic life and their professional life. It's also a way for them to present their work in a dignified professional environment for the public to view, and to begin making industry contacts."

The senior project films often take the students from several semesters to up to two years to complete, and can cost as much as $15,000 apiece. This year, most of a $20,000 scholarship from the Hollywood Foreign Press Association was shared among the film teams to help defray their costs.

The film titles, the principal students, and brief descriptions follow:

- "Life's Rich Pageant and the Naked Ape." Director, editor, writer James Ricker. A man down and out in a pool hall discovers the present can be more important than the past.
- "Moment of Truth." Director Mario Layco. The story of a convicted man in search of truth makes a statement against capital punishment.
- "Through Thick and Thin." Director, writer Layla Mashavu Sewell. A couple's relationship is put to the test by multiple sclerosis.
- "Cry of a Child." Director, writer J. Manuel Hebron. A story of a woman who has a spiritual relationship with her aborted child.
- "Machina." Director, editor, writer Manfred Merchanc. A young man learns the monotony of the city and the loss of hope can lead to tragedy.
