College of Education Program Receives $1.2M Federal Grant

Integrated Teacher Education Program with LAUSD to Change the Way Future Teachers Learn

The U.S. Department of Education has awarded Cal State Northridge a nearly $1.2 million grant spread over five years to launch a new program designed to better prepare teachers for the urban classroom.

The $1,198,921 grant will support CSUN's Integrated Teacher Education Program (ITEP), which changes how teachers are prepared. The program changes how future teachers learn content, teach and use technology as a tool for improving student achievement in elementary schools.

Arlinda Eaton, associate dean of CSUN's College of Education and one of the program's coordinators, said she was excited to receive the grant.

"I don't think it's really set in yet," Eaton said. "We're especially excited about the scholarship component within the grant that allows us to provide students with financial support so they can participate in a program that requires them to be full-time students."

The grant to CSUN was one of eight awarded by the U.S. Department of Education to programs designed to better train teachers for the challenges of today's classrooms.

"Effective teachers are the most critical link to educational excellence and to creating a lifelong love of learning in our children," said U.S. Education Secretary Richard Riley in announcing the awards.
"The reform movement in teacher preparation is very much alive, and I hope that the promising practices these grants produce will be replicated nationwide and put into practice in classrooms and teacher colleges around the nation."

The Education Department grants support partnerships involving one or more college/university teacher preparation programs, the school of arts and sciences at the institution, and a high-need school district. In CSUN's case, the partner school district is Los Angeles Unified.

A school district is considered high-need if at least one of its elementary or secondary schools has 50 percent or more of its students from families with incomes below the poverty level, more than 34 percent of its secondary teachers are not teaching in the content area in which they were trained, or at least 15 percent of its teachers have left in the past three years.

Eaton, Naomi Bishop, director of CSUN's liberal studies program, and Hillary Hertzog, assistant professor of elementary education, are working with the Los Angeles district in developing the program.

Eaton said ITEP hopes to recruit students "from the very communities that so badly need knowledgeable and skilled teachers."

"Recruitment strategies, scholarship support and academic support will be used to attract high school and community college transfer students from underrepresented communities into a program designed to guide them through rigorous subject matter and content study that will result in a bachelor's degree and a teaching credential," she said.

Eaton said ITEP is designed to feature new approaches to the study of content knowledge and the application of that knowledge to the education of kindergarten through sixth grade students.

The program features blended courses, team teaching, paired courses and early and ongoing field experience in LAUSD classrooms linked to the subject matter course work, with an emphasis on diversity and the literacy needs of urban children.

The program also includes the establishment of a collaborative peer support system and a virtual professional development center focused on the support of subject matter knowledge, best practices and collaboration.
Shirley MacLaine Joins CSUN Alumni Authors for Book Signing

Free October 27 Event at Borders Books in Northridge Will Benefit Friends of the Oviatt Library

Special guest actress and author Shirley MacLaine will join dozens of best-selling authors—all with ties to Cal State Northridge—for the university's first Alumni Authors book signing on Friday, October 27, at the Borders Books courtyard in the Northridge Fashion Center.

MacLaine will talk about her latest book, "The Camino: A Journey of the Spirit," and help CSUN celebrate the literary accomplishments of its alumni. Gray Mounger, assistant vice president for alumni relations, said he is excited about the event.

"The versatility of our alumni authors, in a variety of subjects and areas of expertise, is a compliment to the education they received at CSUN," Mounger said. "I know all of our alumni will be proud and prospective students as well as current students will be impressed."

The signing event, scheduled from 6 to 8 p.m., will be free and open to the public. Proceeds of book sales will benefit CSUN's Friends of the Oviatt Library group. The authors scheduled to participate include:

Greg Evans, (right) who graduated with bachelor's degrees in art and English in 1970. Evans is the creator of the nationally syndicated comic "Luann." His books include "Luann (The Plunge)," "Luann: School's OK if You Can Stand the Food," and "Passion! Betrayal! Outrage! Revenge: A Luann Book."

David Gerrold, (left) who has a CSUN bachelor's degree in theatre arts. He wrote the classic "Star Trek" television episode "The Trouble with Tribbles" and is considered one of the world's leading science fiction writers. His novels include "The Man Who Folded Himself," "When Harlie Was One," "A Matter for Men," and "A Season for Slaughter." Gerrold also won science fiction's triple crown—the Hugo, the Nebula and the Locus Readership Poll—for his tale "The Martian Child."

Carrie Latt Wiatt, (right) a 1997 graduate with a master's degree in family and environmental sciences. Wiatt is a best-selling author, nutritionist and chef whose lifestyle and nutrition counseling is widely sought after in Hollywood. She has a daytime show on NBC called "Living Better with Carrie Wiatt." Her books include "Eating by Design" and "Portion Savvy: The 30-Day Smart Plan for Eating Well."

Frank Norwood, (left) who has a degree in English literature, will sign copies of his books, "The Burning," "The Pope Must Die" and "The Man in the Moon." "The Burning" received a Literary Guild and Discover selection, and was a finalist for Discover's book award.

Jerry Bobrow (left) earned a CSUN master's degree in 1976. As executive director of Bobrow Test Preparation Services, he is a national authority in the field of test preparation and has been administering test preparation programs for 27 years. His books, such as "Barron's How to Prepare for the LSAT" and "Cliffs ACT Preparation Guide," have assisted more than two million test takers. Bobrow also lectures to thousands of students each year.

Joyce Kennedy (right) earned a CSUN master's degree in mass communication in 1976. Kennedy is best known locally as the former longtime director of CSUN's former Ventura Campus. But she also served as a flying officer in the Royal Canadian Air Force and has written the book "Distant Thunder, Canada's Citizen Soldiers on the Western Front," which addresses the contributions of Canada to the Allied effort in World War I.

Education Graduate Student Awarded China Scholarship

Former Broadcast Executive Plans to Explore China's 'Television Universities'

Cal State Northridge graduate student Bernard Forster (right)—a former Canadian network television producer and broadcast executive—has been chosen as one of only two students in California this year to receive a special Chinese government scholarship to study in that country.

The scholarship was awarded through the Chinese Consulate in Los Angeles by the China Scholarship Council of China's Ministry of Education. Xuewen E, education consul at the Chinese Consulate, said China looked to CSUN because the university's China Institute "has done a lot in promoting educational programs and establishing academic contacts with universities in China."

Forster, who is studying in CSUN's educational leadership and policy studies master's program, is the second CSUN student in two years to receive the scholarship. He left this fall for Shanghai and will study during this school year at the Shanghai Teachers University. The other California student to receive the Chinese government scholarship this year attends UC San Diego.

Forster hopes to apply his broadcasting experience to higher education by integrating information, entertainment and production values into tele-web courses and classrooms. After returning to CSUN, he plans to share his research with campus academic areas such as education, communication, business and extended learning.

"China, by virtue of its huge population, has already organized a network of 'television universities' to educate en masse," Forster said. "I believe China has developed some solutions that can be adapted here in the United States."

During his time abroad, Forster plans to conduct research on China's television university network, and explore Jewish experiences in Shanghai during World War II. "I am not your traditional college student," he said. Forster's last experience as full-time student was more than 25 years ago as an undergraduate at Concordia University in Montreal.

"I have spent most of my professional life working in network television," Forster said, "which has afforded me the opportunity to travel around the world as a producer and journalist, as well as a private citizen to see first-hand the diverse nature of the planet's cultures and social systems.

"My one unfulfilled quest has been to thoroughly explore China," he said. "I am encouraged that the award encourages the recipient to travel throughout China to gain a diverse experience of the country, its regions, people, cuisine and traditions."

In addition to receiving the Chinese government scholarship, Forster also was awarded Cal State Northridge's Mildred
Z. Mininberg Memorial Fund Award in the amount of $1,000. The award is offered in conjunction with the scholarship to support the recipient's expenses abroad.

Harold Giedt, who served on CSUN's scholarship selection committee and is a former director of CSUN's China Institute, added, "I was impressed by Mr. Forster's successful career in broadcasting and his transitioning to a second career focusing on distance learning. He's definitely a self-starter."

The CSUN graduate student who won the Chinese government scholarship last year-Angus McNelis of CSUN's Radio-TV-Film Department-is still studying during the fall semester at the prestigious Beijing Film Academy where he is finishing a documentary on the new generation of Chinese filmmakers.

The China Institute at Cal State Northridge, since its founding in 1982, has hosted hundreds of Chinese scholars at the university and been influential in arranging many educational and cultural exchange programs between China and the United States.
