Scott Moore (Baylor Univ.) maintains this Web resource as a teaching tool for his students. Updated regularly, it provides links to a broad range of materials on major Continental philosophers (and theologians) and to journals and different schools of philosophical thought. The site is divided into the categories of philosophers, general philosophical resources, and philosophical subjects. Links to language aids such as dictionaries and translators assist with primary source, non-English materials. Another Web site, Continental Philosophy (http://www.augustana.ab.ca/~janzb/continental.htm), maintained by Bruce Janz (Augustana College), offers similar material. His site more clearly defines different areas of thought in Continental philosophy for the newcomer. Moore has designed his Web site to be easily navigated and has provided the source for many of his links on the home page. This site is useful for general readers and undergraduate and graduate students interested in learning more about contemporary Continental philosophers and their theories.—L. Lampert, California State University—Northridge